Course Description:

Firearms Instructor Course (50-Hour / 5-Day Course)

Responsibly training law enforcement officers in the use of firearms requires more than shooting proficiency it requires the ability to develop shooters, diagnose performance issues, manage liability, and deliver effective training that prepares officers for real-world encounters. This comprehensive Firearms Instructor Course is designed to develop firearms instructors who can not only improve their own performance but effectively train and mentor future students.

This course emphasizes modern practical shooting concepts and instructor development, focusing on how officers actually perform under stress during officer-involved shootings (OISs) rather than simply preparing students to pass a qualification course. Students will learn how to identify and correct shooter deficiencies through objective diagnostics, utilize dry-fire training to accelerate skill development, build effective training programs and courses of fire, and manage instructor teams during firearms training events.

Participants will develop a deeper understanding of performance-based instruction, target analysis, shooter diagnostics, recoil management, visual processing, weapon manipulation, and the application of practical shooting principles. The course also examines liability concerns, training documentation, policy considerations, and the lessons learned from analyzing real-world OIS incidents to improve training outcomes. Throughout the course, students will design and teach drills and exercises, conduct student evaluations, and develop the skills necessary to build safe, defensible, and effective firearms training programs within their agencies. Upon completion, graduates will leave with improved shooting performance, enhanced instructional abilities, and a greater understanding of how to develop competent, accountable armed professionals. This course exceeds the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement (TCOLE) requirements for Firearms Instructor Course #2222.
